Warner Bros. Pictures and Village Roadshow Pictures’ WINTER’S TALE Shows the New York State Economy Some Love

NEW YORK - When Warner Bros. Pictures’ and Village Roadshow Pictures’ WINTER’S TALE opens tomorrow, audiences won’t be the only ones benefiting from this Valentine’s Day love story. The project was filmed entirely in New York, and new statistics released by the studio today demonstrate just how impactful the film’s production has been on the local economy.

In the course of production, the studio spent over $15 million with local vendors on housing, catering, wardrobes, construction, and many other services required to make a major motion picture. Additionally, WINTER’S TALE hired nearly 5,000 local cast, crew, and extras who earned over $26 million in wages. The film and television industry in New York has grown steadily over the past few years, thanks largely in part to a reliable tax incentive that attracts productions to the area. According to an HR&A Advisors study released in 2012, jobs analyzed within the industry in New York State grew by nearly 25 percent between 2008 and 2011, while private sector employment as a whole declined 1.6 percent during the same time period.

“Today’s announcement is the latest example of how the State’s film production tax credit program is doing its part to establish New York as the place to be to make a major motion picture,” Governor Andrew M. Cuomo said. “The program enabled us to attract WINTER’S TALE which filmed entirely in New York and generated over $15 million for local vendors and over $26 million for more than 5,000 local crew members, cast and extra hires. We are pleased that more and more film and television producers are choosing New York, and by doing so, are helping grow the state’s economy and create jobs.”

“Thanks to Governor Cuomo’s leadership, New York is now home to a thriving entertainment industry,” said Senator Chris Dodd, Chairman and CEO of the Motion Picture Association of America. “WINTER’S TALE is the latest major studio film to utilize New York’s production tax incentive, and today’s figures remind us of the enormous economic benefit that accompanies local production. It means jobs for the local workforce and income for local businesses, and the statistics released today underscore that.”

"Because the story spans many years, it made location shooting more challenging for the production,” said Lisa Rawlins, Senior Vice President, Public Affairs at Warner Bros. Entertainment. "We are very grateful for the cooperation we received from the neighborhoods we used in New York, especially those in the Brooklyn area, which is an important set piece for the film. Additionally, production’s second unit crew spent six days filming in the Adirondacks and Capital region."

Key figures released today as a result of the production of WINTER’S TALE are:

- $41,465,577 in total local community expenditures. This includes hotels, car rentals, catering, hardware, dry cleaning, local wages, rental fees, permit fees, and other expenses
- $26,998,940 in wages paid to local New York residents
- 2,902 local cast and crew
- 1,989 local extras utilized
